Drawing A Crowd

When a politician comes to town he expects to draw a crowd.

Some people come because they love his policies and they want to hear more from him. Others because they hate his policies and they want to see if he has changed his mind. Some come only to protest. Hitler drew crowds just because people wanted to have their hatred confirmed, or some may have just come out of fear. Then there are the rock stars, the musicians, and actors who draw crowds because people want that element of excitement, emotion, and pure entertainment.

Jesus drew several kinds of people. There were those who came hoping to witness miracles, some who hoped those miracles would be performed on their own illnesses, some who came for the free food, and some to ridicule. There were, however, a few who simply wanted to hear the truth spoken in love. Peter and Paul spoke at times to multitudes but on other occasions there were few who wanted to hear. There is something important to understand about crowds. They are fickle entities.

During the 19th and early 20th centuries crowds gathered regularly to hear the gospel preached. Hundreds, even thousands would spend weeks listening to preachers from around the country. But now it is hard to even draw a crowd with a pencil. If it makes you feel any better, this is not a new phenomenon. Paul told Timothy, "For the time is coming when people will not endure sound teaching, but having itching ears they will accumulate for themselves teachers to suit their own passions, and will turn away from listening to the truth and wander off into myths."

Over the centuries, that "time to wander has come" often and is here again. While it would be great to have thousands gathered around the building to hear the gospel, God has never required that. What he has always looked at is the heart of the individual, whether he is standing alone or with others. One is a sufficient crowd if it is a crowd of faith. But a heart on fire for God will always generate excitement in others.

Love ya,
Dale
