The World's Worst Inventions

This is purely subjective – by that I mean it is entirely my opinion but I do believe the worst thing ever invented was the telephone. Can you imagine how great life must have been before that thing came along. Family dinners were eaten without interruption by salesmen. Your boss could not contact you after work hours. Vacations were actually enjoyed without interference from unimportant messages you couldn't do anything about even if you were home. And families with teenagers had actual adult/child interaction. Life was much simpler (better) without phones.

Probably the second worst invention is something that works with modern day phones - that is a computerized answering system. The other day I made a call trying to correct a mistake made by a major company. I was on the phone for a good 5-7 minutes listening to something like, "If you have a question about..., press 1," "If you have a question about ..., press 2." When I pressed 1 I had another menu to choose from and that resulted in reaching another menu. In the end I went through six layers of menus and still had not talked to a human being. To be perfectly honest I would rather sit on "hold" than to punch buttons in response to a computer that doesn't know me from Adam – there is something dehumanizing about answering a machine's questions.

I am glad God doesn't handle prayer through the phone lines. He is always there and he is always listening to my needs. There is no need to punch 1 or 2 hoping we will reach Him. He is there and responding to what I need. No "hold" buttons are needed. The only thing necessary is a Christian with a contrite heart; God will handle the rest.

Love ya,

Dale
